Hynek Pikhart's lecture was delivered with great professional erudition. He presented both the past and future research activities. The lecture also contained a short methodological anchoring of the research direction, including the presentation of the main theoretical models. The lecture was very interesting and attractive to the audience. Hynek has shown that he knows his professional topic in a broad context, and his research in social and environmental inequalities in health is at a world-class level. He was able to explain even more complicated problems in a relatively simple form for a wider audience, which is, among other things, necessary for his teaching activities. He answered all the questions thoroughly in the discussion.

This lecture convincingly demonstrated the high pedagogical and didactical skills of the applicant. Importantly, he was able to transfer complex original scientific findings to well-understandable insights for larger audiences.
